

On August 30th chaos swept through the aisles of concessions at the Livoina Spree as terrified fair goers ran for their lives lest they be squashed under the tiny little feet of ravenous swine.

As one fair goer commented after the ordeal:

“ It was adorable and hilarious. You could hear the grunting and oinking as the escaped pigs searched for food and chased those who were unwilling to give up their corn dogs and other food.”

There were many others who shared the same sentiments although those who lost their food were more upset about the whole ordeal.

After the dust had settled and the pigs wrangled everyone wanted to know what happened. The cordinators found three young kids had decided the pigs were sad being stuck in a pen and, so, needed to be set free.

The Spree cordinators have released an announcement saying: Plans are already being designed to insure this ordeal does not happen again.

The children were chastised but as no one was hurt and no real damage had been done there was no formal punishment. It's safe to say this was the most eventful Spree in decades.
